WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan on Thursday appointed Donald Rumsfeld, a moderate Republican and former defense secretary, to be the new U.S. special envoy to the Middle East.

Mr. Reagan said "I cannot think of a better individual" to undertake the task of helping negotiate the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon and working for a peace settlement between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

"We intend to work and use the ile Fast," the president said.

Mr. Reagan appealed to the Lebanese leaders meeting in Geneva to "put the problems of the past aside" and "move toward a national consensus. Progress in their talks could lead to the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon and the establishment of a truly representative government," he said. The president said Richard Fair-tion meetings.

Mr. Reagan said "progress in Lebanon will add momentum to the serious efforts that are going on to establish broader peace" in the Middle East. He said his September 1982 peace formula was "the best chance for a resolution of the Arab-Israeli conflict."

"No one's come up with a better proposal since," said Mr. Reagan of his "realistic" plan, which included a freeze on Israeli settlement of the West Bank and selfgovernment for Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip in association with Jordan. According to the president's spokesman, Larry M. Speakes, there are 5,980 soldiers on the island as well as some air force per-sonnel. He said the marines and army rangers who took part in the landing had been withdrawn.

Mr. Reagan, in a brief question-and-answer session, said he would take a step similar to the Grenadian invasion elsewhere "if all the conditions were the same." Asked about the Nicaraguan

Grenada and Lebanon Raise Doubts About U.S. Intelligence Operations

By Philip Taubman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The bombng of U.S. Marine headquarters in Beirut on Oct. 23 and the imexpectedly large Cuban presence that American forces say they found in Grenada have raised major questions about the performance of U.S. intelligence agencies.

These questions, like earlier ones about security at the marine headquarters, are being examined at senior levels of the Keagan aurunistration and by Congress. The intelligence questions revolve around two immediate concerns: whether better information might have helped prevent the attack on the marines in Beirut and whether the troops that invaded Grenada were sufficiently inban forces on the island.

According to the officials, the events in Lebanon and Grenada raised fundamental questions about the nation's intelligence agencies, including whether the peared to be planning an attack United States had become too dependent on sophisticated electronic surveillance instead of human government officials, including agents for spying.

These questions have put the Central Intelligence Agency and Intelligence officials acknowledged that detailed information on both subjects was unavailable, but said that planning for the invasion moved so rapidly that there was little time to prepare the kind of tactical intelligence normally required for a military assault. The officials noted that the CIA

Whites Vote 2-1 In South Africa For Parliament With Nonwhites

By Allister Sparks Washington Post Service

PRETORIA - The government Thursday won an overwhelming 5-percent endorsement from South Africa's white voters of a new constitution that will give nominal political rights to some nonwhites for the first time.

Liberal and far-rightist parties. which opposed the constitution, both fared badly. The liberals opposed the constitution because they considered it tokenism, the rightists because they saw it as the thin end of a wedge. The "no" vote prevailed in only one of the country's 15 polling regions.

Final results showed 1.36 million votes, or 66.3 percent, in favor and 691.577 votes, or 33.7 percent,

The government's almost 2-to-1 margin exceeded all predictions. and U.S. diplomatic sources were quietly expressing the hope that it would encourage Prime Minister Pieter W. Botha to introduce further changes in the system of strict segregation called apartheid.

Mr. Botha himself strengthened these hopes after the result was announced when he said at a news conference that "we now have a vote in favor of evolutionary reform." But he still left doubts about what kind of change he had in mind for the 21 million blacks, who do not feature in the new constitution.

Mr. Botha also said he hoped the result would "strengthen the attitude of friendly nations" toward South Africa. Referring specifically to the United States and the Reagan administration's policy of constructive engagement" with South Africa, he said: "I think it will contribute to better under-

Defeat Leaves Peronists in Disarray; Mrs. Peron's Return Is Sought Anew

By Edward Schumacher New York Times Service

BUENOS AIRES — Argentina's Peropist Party has fallen into disarray after its first electoral defeat. Factional lighting and calls for the resignation of party leaders has broken out amid attempts to determine who was to blame for the upset presidential victory of Raul Alfonsin, of the Radical Party, over the Peronist candidate, Italo A. There have been renewed calls for the return from self-exile in Spain of former President Isabel Perón, who was largely forgotten in the campaign. There was no confirmed indica-Nahih Berri, leader of the Shiite Moslem Amal militia, said Mr. Ge-mayel would depart soon for Washington and possibly other capitals as part of the new diplomatic offensive.

Mr. Berri said Lebanon's "na-

The resolution avoided any reference to the May 17 Israeli-Lebanese troop withdrawal agreement, which emerged as the major issue in the conference. By avoiding such a reference, the representatives of Lebanon's warring factions ap-peared for the time being to sidestep the issue of whether to freeze or cancel the pact.

Nitze Seen About to Make Arms Offer

BRUSSELS (Reuters) - Paul H. Nitze, the chief U.S. negotiator at the Geneva arms control talks, will present for the first time next week "i treaty language" proposals made by President Ronald Reagan in September on medium-range nuclear missiles, NATO sources said Thursday.

The sources said the response to the latest proposals of President Yur V. Andropov of the Soviet Union would include aircraft and a regional balance in Europe, but one official cantioned that "on the central issue of the missile balance in Europe, the Soviets have not budged. They still will not accept any U.S. deployments in Europe on behalf of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization."

In Geneva on Thursday, U.S. and Soviet officials held two hours of talks on limiting European-based nuclear missiles, and a Soviet official, who asked not to be identified said Moscow would probably remain at the negotiating table until Pershing-2 and cruise missiles are deployed in December Remarks by Mr. Andropov last week had prompted speculation that Moscow might walk out of the negotiations this month. A U.S. spokesman said that the two sides had agreed to hold a single session next. Wednesday at the Soviet mission.

Hospital Aides in U.S. Are Indicted

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Nine present or former sides at Pennhurst Center, a Pennsylvania institution for the severely-mentally retarded, were indicated Thursday on federal charges of abusing patients.

The nine indictments, returned in U.S. District Court in Philadelphia, charged that the aides at the institution beat, kicked, slapped or punched patients in a series of incidents at Pennhurst Center, Spring City, during 1981 and 1982. Only one of the defendants is still employed at Permhurst "This should give a clear message to employees of state mental hospitals and facilities for the mentally retarded across the country that abuse of patients will not be tolerated by the federal government," said Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds. The indictments resulted from a year-long federal investigation and was based in part on the work of an undercover woman police agent.

Soviet Submarine Is Spotted Off U.S.

WASHINGTON (Reuters) — A U.S. patrol plane has spotted a Soviet nuclear-powered submarine on the surface and apparently in distress off the east coast of the United States, the Defense Department said

It said in a statement that the Viktor-3 class vessel, one of the Soviet Navy's most modern submarines, had not issued a distress call but appeared to be experiencing mechanical problem. The Pentagon did not claborate on the possible problems, but an official said the submarine was moving very slowly on the surface. Such submarines usually remain submerged, he said. The Pentagon said the submarine was about 282 miles (about 450 follometers) west of Bermuda and 470 miles east of Charleston, South Carolina. A navy patrol plane from the naval air station in Jacksonville, Florida, first sighted the submarine early Wednesday, the Pentagon said.

Dutch Public Workers Begin Strikes

AMSTERDAM (Reuters) — Groups of public sector workers in the Netherlands began strikes Thursday against a planned government wage cut, but there was little sign of the serious national disruption sought by some union leaders.

Public transport in Rotterdam, Utrecht and Nijmegen was halted by 24- or 48-hour strikes, and in Amsterdam public utility workers said they would strike next week. Railroad employees are already working to rule and postal and telecommunications workers are expected to strike.

Union leaders said Wednesday that they would lannch major protests after talks with the government over its plan for a 3.5-percent wage cut

Romania Prepares New Energy Curbs
BUCHAREST (AP) — Romanians were told Thursday to brace for a new round of power cuthacks and restrictions on other services in an attempt to save dwindling energy supplies before winter.

Newspaper articles suggested a return to the austerity measures decreed last winter, when the government ordered regular cutoffs of electric power, heat, warm water and other services, including public transports-

Most of the restrictions were lifted last spring, but the government daily, Romania Libera, published Thursday a new energy-saving plan banning neon signs, illuminated advertising as well as the use of household heaters and electric boilers from 5 P.M. to 10 P.M. Officials said a two-year drought had caused low water levels in lakes and reservoirs and reduced hydroelectric power.

Senate Panel and Dole Make Arms Of Offer 3-Year Packages To Cut Budget Deficits

By Jonathan Fuerbringer New York Tones Service

WASHINGTON — The Senate Budget Committee has sent to the Senate floor a $28-billion, threeyear package to reduce the U.S. budget deficits but the chairman of the committee, Pete V. Domenici, Republican of New Mexico, said he would push the Scuate to approve a larger package. Also Wednesday, Senator Rob-

Reagan Signs Bill To Create Holiday In Honor of King

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - Black and white Americans, Republicans and Democrats, liberals and conserva-tives joined together Wednesday as President Ronald Reagan signed a bill to establish a public holiday in King Jr. A crowd of several hundred people sang the anthem of the civil rights movement, "We Shall Overcome," after Mr. Reagan signed the bill in the Rose Garden of the White House. The president paid tribute to King, who was assassinated in 1968, saying his words and deeds had "stirred our nation to the very depths of its soul."

King's widow, Coretta Scott King, the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson, a contender for the Democratic presidential nomination, and Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, were among those present in the Rose Garden. The new law establishes the third Monday in January as a legal public boliday, starting in 1986.

Mrs. King said that the United States was a more democratic, just and peaceful nation because of her husband's work. "His nonviolent campaigns brought about redemption, reconciliation and justice,

There would be a 3-percent across-the-board reduction in spending including the military but excluding programs for the poor, which many in the Senate and the House contend have been cut enough. There would also be a reduction in automatic cost-of-living increases for Social Security and civilian and military pensions. While Mr. Domenici has yet to produce a specific proposal, he hopes to harness the desires of other senators — expressed mostly in rhetoric so far -- to approve a package that would make a significant dent in the government's pro-jected $200-billion budget deficits.

Meanwhile, former President Gerald R. Ford said approval of a package of tax increases and spending reductions "cannot wait until after the 1984 elections." Mr. Domenici has expressed the same view, but members of Congress in both parties have said that tax legislation cannot be enacted before the elections without support by

Favorite Daughter in Kentucky Politics

After Mrs. Collins defeated two men in the Democratic primary in May, there were those who though: she would be in for a tough race against Jim Bunzing, a Republican and a former baseball star.

The race failed to live up to its billing. With 5-2 registration disadvantage, Republicans have won the Kentucky governorship only six times since the Civil War, and each time that was only because Democrats were divided.

This year the party rallied behind Mrs. Collins, and by midsummer size had been endorsed by organized labor, every former Democratic governor and her two primary foes, Harvey Sloane, the mayor of Louisville, and Grady Stumbo, the state secretary of human resources.

Mr. Bunning, 52, began the race unknown in much of the state, and his campaign was slow to get moving. It was not until recently that he moved within 15 points of Mrs. Collins in opinion polls done for both campaigns. Mrs. Collins, who has served as acting governor for 480 days in the past four years during Governor John Y. Brown Jr.'s frequent absences from the state, has acted almost like an incumbent, basing much of her campaign on the argument that she under- of the family."

"I've served almost 500 days as governor." she said, "so Kentucky has had a test drive of what it's like to have a woman governor." She has agreed to only one televised debate with Mr. Bunning and treats him as little more than an irritant. Asked to characterize his campaign, she responded. "I didn't know he had one." During a recent campaign stop in this central Kentucky city, she asked voters to give her a landslide, not just a victory. "I need a victory," she said, "that leaves no doubt in anyone's mind who is governor, and who speaks for Kentucky when I go to Washington in behalf of our state."

Mrs. Collins is acutely aware that if she wins she will become the country's only woman governor, and that her name will almost automatically be included among possible Democratic vice presidential candidates. She encourages such speculation, but at the same time she argues that she has been judged more harshly by statehouse reporters, who consider her a lightweight, than if she were a man. When Mr. Bunning has played on the gen-

As many as 375,000 workers may be "exposed to a grave danger" by breathing asbestos at currently acceptable levels, Secretary of Labor Raymond J. Donovan said

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration's emergency health standard, expected to go into effect Friday, would require employers to introduce respirators, new work procedures and possibly additional protective clothing to reduce the amount of asbestos libers allowed in the workplace from 2 fibers to 0.5 fibers per cubic centi-

The emergency standard, which will be in effect for six months while officials decide whether it should be permanent, was invoked after the agency completed a risk assessment of 11 scientific studies on the health effects of asbestos exposure. Guatemala Reported About to Accept U.S. Offer of Helicopter Spare Parts

By John M. Goshko

WASHINGTON - Guatemala about to accept a Reagan administration offer to sell it helicopter spare parts, which some members of Congress think should be recon-sidered because of assertions that the Guatemalan military regime has failed to improve its humanrights record.

At issue is the U.S. decision in January to end a five-year embargo on military aid to Guatemala and approve requests to buy $6.36 milon worth of parts for heavy-duty UH-IH helicopters used by the Guatemalan armed forces to fight a eftist insurgency.

To Negotiate With House On Actions in Nicaragua

WASHINGTON - The Senate voted Thursday to allow continued U.S. covert actions against the Marxist government of Nicaragua and opened the way for negotiations with the House, which has voted twice to stop spending money on the program.

The 1984 intelligence authorization bill now goes to a House-Senate conference committee that will try to work out a compromise.

Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan. Democrat of New York, deputy chairman of the Senate intelligence committee, said the Senate panel and its House counterpart were "closer in these matters than might be supposed."

The Senate approved its version of the intelligence bill on a voice vote after about 50 minutes of low-

Senator Moynihan said the intelligence committee had agreed to allow continued covert actions based on a new finding submitted by the administration outlining the goals and details of the program. Earlier plans were "too broad and too ambitious," he said. Senator Patrick J. Leahy, Democrat of Vermont, spoke against the bill, saying, "The president's course of action is illegal."

Senator Leahy said President Ronald Reagan was attempting to substitute covert and military programs for foreign aid. He said U.S. pressure on the pro-Soviet Sandin-ist government of Nicaragua was only "strengthening the hands of Sandinista radicals to bring in Cuban and Soviet military assis-

Air Force Colonel Identifies the Body Of Man Who Allegedly Killed Aquino Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches

MANILA - An air force officer on Thursday identified the body of Benigno S. Aquino Jr.'s alleged assassin at the opening of a new inquiry, but he denied that he had employed him up until a week before the assassination.

Arturo Custodio, an air force colonel, appeared at a military morgue to identify the body of the man the government says carried out the Aug. 21 assassination of Mr. Aquino, President Ferdinand E. Marcos's chief political rival.

As a technician took off the white sheet covering the body of the man suspected of killing Mr. Aquino, Colonel Costodio said: "You don't need to do that. I believe this is Rolando Galman. I am sure of Asked about press reports that he had employed Mr. Galman to do occasional light work" until a week before the assassination, Colonel Custodio said "it's not true" and left hurriedly.

Colonel Custodio was one of four persons who identified Mr. Galman, 33, lying naked on a stainless steel table during the bizarre proceedings before television cameras. First was his mother, Saturnina, 53, accompanied by her daughter Marilyn, 21. Rosendo Cawigan, 44, a former Aquino aide turned government agent, identified Mr. Galman as a guerrilla known by the alias Commander Bert Ramos. She said he had been hired by communists to kill Mr. Aquino.

JAL EXECUTIVE CLASS More leg room. More comfort. At no more than the normal economy fare.

From November 14th 1983, Japan Air Lines introduces its new Executive Class on all B747s flying the Polar and Trans-Siberian routes.

For no more than the normal economy fare* the new Executive Class brings a new style of comfort to long-distance travel.

Replacing the present J and C business classes, it surpasses them both for sheer luxury

There's more leg room with the seat pitch increased from 34 to 37 inches.

There's more shoulder room with only 8-abreast seating,

There's more space to sit back and relax with the recline angle of seats increased to 37.°

And there's a foot rest to complete your comfort.

The cabin service has an extra touch of class, with even more service improvements due by next Spring.

And with all the exclusive Japanese style, it's a Class you'll want to be in more often.

Deficits and Dry Attics

The U.S. Treasury Department keeps desperately trying to persuade you that the enormous Reagan deficits have nothing - well, not very much - to do with interest rates. And if they have nothing to do with interest, then they cannot be responsible for the high exchange rate of the dollar. Can they? So the automobile industry, and the steel industry, and all those other industries being squeezed by high exchange rates ought to stop pointing their fingers at the budget deficit. Right? Last week the undersecretary of the Treasury, Beryl W. Sprinkel, carried that message to the House Banking Committee.

It is a matter of exquisite embarrassment to the Treasury that, across the street on the very premises of the White House, the chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers keeps making a different case. The chairman, Martin Feldstein, points out - correctly that there is a strong relationship that runs from high deficits to high interest to high exchange rates.

But the Treasury perceives, no doubt equally correctly, that Mr. Reagan does not plan to do anything serious about the deficit before the election. The Treasury is loyally trying to deflect the whole painful line of inquiry into what that might mean for the economy. Treasury officials explain that many factors influchanges in inflation and investment flows and trade patterns and all the rest of the gloriously complicated machinery of world finance.

But that is like saying that there are many complicated reasons for the puddle of water in your attic. There is the fact that in this climate it often rains. There is also the phenomenon that rain falls downward rather than up; all scholars agree on that point. There is also a hole in your roof. Since you cannot do much about either the climate or gravity, you do best to direct your attention to the roof if you want

Similarly, if the United States wants lower interest and exchange rates it had best get that deficit down. There are many other things that influence the rates, but the deficit is the only one reliably in the reach of the government.

The Reagan administration came to town promising that its tax cuts would do great things for employment and industrial development. But so far the only visible effect has been the deficit, with all its consequences. The dollar's strength, vis-à-vis the yen, contributes to unemployment in the United States as exports fall, and aggravates all the strains on the heavy industries that face international competition. For them, the great tax cut of 1981 seems to be having an effect that is precisely the opposite of its authors' intention.

Not Much to Be Done

The weather, it seems, will turn a little warmer during the next century. The human race is now burning fossil fuels on a scale that generates carbon dioxide faster than the normal cycle can absorb it, and the global balance is changing. As carbon dioxide accumulates,

Earth's atmosphere will trap more solar heat the 17th century and then began to get warmer around the time of the Napoleonic Wars. Evi-

The Greenhouse Effect

Vary Energy Sources

Climatologists, having debated the greenhouse effect for a century, now agree that the theory is right. If carbon dioxide increases enough, the ice sheets of Greenland and the Antarctic could melt and raise sea level by up to six meters. Climactic changes would disrupt agriculture and change fertile lands to desert.

Two new reports, one prepared for the Environmental Protection Agency and the other for the National Academy of Sciences, have more in common than might at first appear. They agree on the theory of the greenhouse effect but differ on the numbers to be plugged into it. Perhaps because of the guidance of two economists, William Nordhaus and Thomas Schelling, the Academy's report is more tentative in predicting change and more confident of the adaptability of economic systems.

Surely the seas may rise and the crop-growing belt may be pushed northward. But, says the Academy report, dikes could be built around coastal cities, just as the Dutch have walled out the sea for centuries. Crops could be genetically engineered to grow in changed climates. The predictable effects of a global warming can be coped with. The unpredictable effects, perhaps including a sudden release of the methane gas stored in ocean sediments, are the only thing we have to fear. The Academy's message, in brief, is that the greenhouse effect is for real but we can live with it.

That needed saying, because the greenhouse effect still has its skeptics. A major embarrass-ment for the theory is that the carbon dioxide content of the atmosphere has been steadily rising for the last 25 years, yet the predicted warming has not definitely appeared. Explanations can be provided, but are inevitably ad hoc. The Academy thinks that amid the natural short- and long-term fluctuations of global temperature a warming signal is discernible, and at least not clearly absent.

"A soberness and sense of urgency should underlie our response to a greenhouse warming," concludes the Environmental Protection Agency. "There is little urgency for reductions in carbon dioxide emissions below an uncontrolled path before A.D. 1990," states the National Academy of Sciences. Preventing the carbon dioxide emissions from coal plants would be extraordinarily costly. Although the Academy sees no need for immediate policy changes, the greenhouse warming is a strong, long-term argument for an energy program that is as diverse as possible, emphasizing both workable nuclear power and conservation. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Other Opinion

As the Dust Settles in Grenada

Mr. Reagan seems to have scored an important point in American public opinion. Such is the clear result one week after U.S. troops invaded Grenada. The majority of Americans grasp only the essentials about the invasion: that there were armed Cubans in Grenada and that a pawn, a modest one, yet symbolic of Soviet influence in the Caribbean, has fallen.

Grenadians, too, seem relieved. They have remained largely sympathetic to Maurice Bishop and unanimously condemn the handful of revolutionaries who decided to assassinate their charismatic leader, a man who wished to strengthen ties with the United States. One question, however, remains unanswered: Who ordered the assassination?

Daysi Bouterse, the opportunist strongman of Suriname, is distancing himself from Cuba, his former supporter. The Sandmists are worried because they know Cuba would not come to their aid if the United States intervened directly in Nicaragua; Fidel Castro has said as much publicly. And it is Cuba, held in check by events beyond its control, which appears to

The contest is close and the returns late in the more distant States of the West, but, as the trend is Republican, it is safe to give him the entire Pacific Coast. There are very significant reports from the South, showing heavy Republican gains. These, however, are not sufficient to change the complexion of the Solid South. President Roosevelt congratulates Mr. Taft, who in turn congratulates Mr. Roosevelt. The Republican tidal wave ensures a Republican House.

It may be assumed that this is the Reich bishop's interpretation of a promise given by Chancellor Hitler when he assumed his office - that politics should be kept from the Church. A U.S.-Israeli Role Reversal Over Events in Lebanon

JERUSALEM — An important shift has developed in U.S.-Israeli relations in the last few months. It is bringing a virtual reversal of roles that could have long-term implications for both countries.

From having committed itself to protect Israel for two generations, the United States is now trying to engage Israel as the active protector of what are seen as America's interests.

Thus, Secretary of State George Shultz complains that the Israelis have lost their nerve. American officials hint that there may have to be another Israeli-Syrian war to straighten out the situation in Lebanon, just when Israelis are beginning to talk of finding a modus vivendi with Syria somewhere down the road.

There is a hundle of ironies. Last year Washington was pressing for Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon and trying to promote Jordanian-Palestinian talks with Israel under the Reagan initiative. Now the United States wants Israel to take the lead in "checkmating" Hafez al-Assad of Syria, as one American put it.

Arab leaders have not caught on to the change. They are still intoning traditional demands that the United States extract conces-

Israelis are war-weary. Gideon Rafael, a veteran diplomat who is in the opposition, puts it more bluntly than anyone in government would do when he says, "No responsible Israeli would allow this country to become a sword for hire." But government officials remind one tartly that they did not ask the United States to send Marines to Beirut and that the Marines protect no Israeli interests. Two years ago, Defense Minister Ariel Sharon of Israel and U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig were talking about a grandiose "strategic consensus." The illusion collapsed with the U.S. recognition of its extravagance and with Mr. Sharon's political failure. But curiously, it is now being revived by Washington. It is not at all clear precisely what the United States wants Israel to do. No doubt that is

That was the main reason the Israeli offers of quick medical care and emergency assistance were rejected after the Marines' catastrophe in Beirut. The Israelis were offended because they considered their offer humanitarian, not political.

Mr. Shultz is playing hawk, urging more "coordination" in the effort to convert Lebanon's limp president, Amin Gemayel, into a mighty American fighter against Soviet-supported Syria. The Israelis cannot resist cracks about the American role in advising Mr. Gemayel not to rely on Israel.

Bitter notes are struck. Seldom have Washington and Jerusalem been so wary of each other's intentions and capacities. The imbroglio is deepened by disagreements within the Israeli establishment, so that the arguments are not just between two sides but among four and

The mess in Lebanon is the immediate issue.

The Israelis agree that collapse of Mr. Gemayel's embryonic government and a Syrian protectorate over most of Lebanon would be a disaster for the United States in the Middle East, and therefore bad for Israel too. But they are cantious about the risks of trying to prevent it so long as the United States will not engage its own force on a large scale, and, are not at all sanguine about the chances of

Before Reconciliation, Time for Healing Is Needed

PARIS — Perhaps the greatest complication in dealing with Lebanon today — and with the Arab world always - is the tendency of the U.S. government to approach these situations on the basis of what they should be, not what they are. If local truths and facts are illogical or unpleasant, they are simply overlooked. One of the best examples of such self-induced illusions is the announced goal of restoring a united and peaceful Lebanon.

From antiquity, Lebanou was never a country or a stable political enti-ty of any kind. Instead, it was part of the area known as Syria, or Greater Syria, which also included Palestine and what is now Jordan. Following the 1860 massacre by the Druze of more than 10,000 Christians, Napoleon III, backed by the major Westem powers of the period, sent a French expeditionary force. It remained one year, re-established order and left only after the Turkish government had taken steps to protect the Christian population, essentially Maronite as it is today. It set up a self-governing area under a Christian governor who reported to Istanbul.

This first Lebanese entity, at first only the land-locked mountain heartland of the Maronites, was later enlarged but never extended beyond a third of present-day Lebanon. Essentially, it included Beirut, the heavily the French Mandate, this does not appear to be the main priority of President Hafez al-Assad.

The uppermost consideration seems to be the presence in Beirut of a government friendly to Syria: a weak government and one not domi-nated by Christians. If one looks at Syrian policy in Lebanon since civil war began there in 1975, there is a common thread of action aimed at making it impossible for any one Lebanese camp to obtain a clear victory. Damascus's support for the Lebanese Druze may be partly explained by the fact that the Druze, while desirous of local autonomy, are not numerous enough to aspire to control the entire country. As to Israel, Jerusalem obviously wants a safe area in southern Lebanon, insulating Galilee as much as possible. Israel would also like a friendly government in Beirut controlling the entire country. But failing such a favorable development, a weak and unstable country through which pressures could be exerted on Syria, and perhaps other countries - might be preferable to a partition that left part of Lebanon under Syrian military control.

Other countries, such as the Soviet Union and Libya, find it helpful to their general objectives to fan the flames in Lebanon.

In Jackson, a Candidate With Flair

WASHINGTON — There is a W great deai to be said for the presidential candidacy of the Rev. Jesse Jackson, not the least of which is that he will inject some excitement into the Democratic primary. Mr. Jackson - civil rights leader,

He is, indeed, something of a media creation. He knows how to use the media to get his issues across, a fact that doubtless was not lost on Assistant Attentey General William Bradford Revnoids when he went into the Mississippi Delta this summer with Mr. Jackson to hear horrer steries about voter discrimination against blacks. Mr. Reynolds, a frequent target of civil rights leaders, ended up linking arms with Mr. Jackson and singing "We Shall Overcome" at every stop on the tour, winning favorable front-page notices for Mr. Jackson and the Reagan administration, towns, Washington or a hotel, Mr. Jackson was able to get on "60 Minutes," one of the nation's toprated TV shows, to announce that he was running. With an audience of 40 million people, it is safe to say Mr. Jackson received far more viewers' attention than John Glenn has gotten in "The Right Stuff."

Mr. Jackson has a way with phrases that no doubt will earn him star billing in the presidential primary debates. This is the man who gave us the "rainbow coalition" for the Hispanics, blacks and women, who speaks of moving from the "battleground to the common ground," and who says school kids need "hope in their brains instead of dope in their veins." Mr. Jackson is not only going to frame issues that are important to blacks - and force them onto the Democratic Party's political agenda — but he is going to frame them in a way that will make people, blacks and whites, talk about them and about him.

Has any other Democratic candidate given us a single memorable phrase during the past six months? No matter what people think of the Jackson candidacy, they have to be appreciative of at least one result: Political oratory may become an art form once again.

Before he announced, the polis were showing Mr. Jackson running presidential candidates announce a distant third behind former Vice at press conferences in their home President Walter Mondale and Mr.

steadily gained support among black voters. In fact, the latest ABC poll shows him as the first choice among 46 percent of the black voters. The polls also show that a Jackson candidacy hurts Mr. Mondale more than Mr. Glenn, which means that those who believe that Mr. Glenn, the centrist, will mount the strongest challenge to President Reagan have to be elated about the Jackson candidacy. About 10 million of the 17 million blacks who are eligible to vote are registered. Mr. Jackson has set a goal of registering three to four mil-lion more. And while he will drain black support from Mr. Mondale in the primaries, particularly in the South and in some urban areas, his candidacy can only increase the interest of black voters in the political process.

Black voters who back Mr. Jackson in the Southern primaries can look forward to a candidate brokering their interests at the Democratic convention. At the same time, the Democratic Party will benefit from increased voter participation by blacks.

Jesse Jackson cannot win the nomination, but neither is he the spoiler that some are calling him. His candidacy and the serious discussions about having a female vice presidential candidate on the Democratic ticket are probably the healthiest developments in U.S. presidential politics in a long time.

Mr. Haberman notes that the Sakhalin Koreans lost their Japanese citizenship after the war. But the crucial point is that the Japanese govern-ment took them to Sakhslin as Japanese and then, without consulting the Sakhalin Koreans, denied them re-entry on the grounds that they were not Japanese. Having decided they were non-Japanese, the Tokyo gov-erament refused to issue entry permits to them until 1976, except in a few special cases.

Unfortunately, just about the time the Japanese government began to issue permits, the Soviet government stopped. Under the new Soviet Constitution of 1977, "stateless" persons became treated as Soviet citizens. Since February 1977, only two Sakhalin Koreans have gotten into la-pan: both came as Soviet citizens and returned to Sakhalin.

The original Koreans who were taken to Sakhalin are growing old. Most now have children and grandchildren in Sakhalin and probably. are willing to stay there. But reports indicate that many want to be able to meet their families before they die. Time is short.

Only After Adenauer Regarding "Anti-Missile Demon-strations Reveal Collopse of West Ger-man Consensus" (IHT, Oct. 26):

Henry Tanner reports from Bonn on the collapse of the West German consensus on national security that "has existed virtually since the end of World. War II." In fact, when the bases of West German national security policy were laid down in the 1950s by Konrad Adenauer, there was no consensus. It was only in the late 1950s and early 1960s that the Social Democratic Party, the major opposition force, accepted the basic principles of Mr. Adenauer's foreign and security policies.

From the Muppets' Small World to Henson Global TV Inc.

ARIS — Jim Henson, who invented "Sesame Street" and "The Muppets," has a new television pupper show with a global concept and unitinational backing. It's rather as if the Cookie Monster had become head of Nabisco.

The new show, "Fraggle Rock," is produced by Henson and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Countries, such as France, Britain and the United States, that sign on as coproducers are provided with their own central character and setting as well as a script and puppeters. "With co-productions we can tailor the beginning and end of the show for each country," Henson says.

In France, the central and only human character is a chef, in the United States he is a crackpot inventor named Doc, in Britain he is a lighthouse keeper. Henson is crazy about the lighthouse. "I would love to use it in the U.S. I think we could move Doc into a lighthouse."

In each version a hole in the wall connects the human character with the world of the Fraggles. They never meet and only the puppet dog Sprocket (Croquette in French) realizes there is a whole world on the other side of the Countries that do not sign up as co-producers get a dubbed version of "Fraggle Rock."

They include Poland and India. Japan has yet to mbble. "We never had a success there with The Muppets," Henson says, "and they thought the Fraggles looked frightening and were the wrong color, which is odd because Fraggles are all colors under the sun." Fraggles are small and furry and come in such shades as sea green, orange and fuchsia. They sing a lot and work a 30-minute week. They live with the tiny Doozers, who wear hard son says. The Fraggles eat the Doozer con-structions, which delights the Doozers as they can build more." Doozer constructions are made out of radishes.

Other characters include the giant Gorgs, a royal family with no subjects and a habit of speaking Elizabethan-style English (the Fraggles can't make head or tail of them), and a trash heap named Manjory, who is always spouting cliches of dubious wisdom that the Fraggles swallow book, line and sinker. The Fraggles' link with the outside world is Traveling Matt, an explorer type in a pith belinet who sends back postcards from his travels.

"Traveling Matt is out in the world misunderstanding it." Henson says, "which works with what we are trying to say — that you can see a world and totally not understand it. He talks to automobiles and I was just looking the other night at my favorite sequence, which we shot in San Francisco. He's at the wharf and these fishermen are mending nets. He says these people were sewing holes together and after they finished sewing all those holes, they put them in a boat and went out to the ocean and threw them away. I love that that's a wonderful misinterpretation of what's happen-

The characters are engaging, the technique expectedly expert. The ideas behind the show are dead serious - ecology, interdependence, friendship. "Because Fraggle Rock is a fantasy world and its characters are puppets of no particular race, national origin or economic level, its viewers can look at themselves with detachment," says a handout from the American co-producer, Home Box Office. "Even the games, clothing and names are not identified with one country or culture. Fraggle Rock is indeed universal.

"In 'Fraggle Rock' we're trying to do something that will be of value in terms of internatrying to set up a world where there are all these different strata of creatures that don't understand each other at all and have no concept of why the others are existing and to deal with that whole area of misunderstanding be-

The 47-year-old Henson, soft-spoken and given to such expletives as "Oh rats," has just finished his third Muppet movie although the Muppet television show has ended as planned after five years. Jerry Juhl, the senior writer, who has been with Henson from the start, is writing "Fraggle Rock." "Sesame Street" still goes on and Henson occasionaly shows up to play his favorite frog, Kermit.

Television's only genius, the one person who has created something for a medium that is based on forms filched from radio, music hall and films, Henson is frankly crazy about televi-sion. "I love television. I don't know much about the insides of it all but I love working with what it can do." One thing he has made it do is create a coherent and unique world of shifting proportions in which real people and puppers happily co-exist.

"It's interesting," Henson says, "the live person working with the pupper. The live person has always been the doorway, the bridge between audience and puppets, who makes the characters more believable."

It was his love of television that got him into puppetry when a television station in Washington, where he was reared, gave him a job as an assistant puppeteer in the 1950s. He developed an appreciation of puppetry very slowly; now his dream is to have "Fraggle Rock" seen in the Soviet Union, where there are at least 2,000 puppet companies.

The father of five children, Henson has homes in Manhattan and Westchester County and London, and dresses, as New Yorkers do these days, in the L.L. Bean backwoodsman

HIT (Henson International Television). "1 don't know how many companies we have." he says. "It's about six or seven — HA, HE, HO, HI. . ." His chief influence was Walt Kelly's comic strip, "Pogo," and those who see a resemblance between the characters of Kermit and Pogo are quite right. While "The Muppets" was more and more for adults, "Fraggie Rock" is definitely a children's show, approached with the appropriate earnest intentions. The word "Fraggle" is derived from the Frackles of the Muppet shows. Fraggles are softer and cuter than Frackles," Henson gravely explains.

"We wanted the 'Fraggle Rock' characters to be silly, we wanted the show to be a lot of fun." ef Fraggles include Gobo, an Everytnan figure, the tomboy Red (little girls, it seems, had no one to identify with on the Muppet Show except Miss Piggy), the pessimistic Booper, and Wembley. "Wembley is very much like A.A. Milne's Piglet," Henson says. "He wembles all the time because he can't make up his mind."

There are surprising things you can do with puppers that you cannot do with live actors. Henson says. You can deal more directly with emotions, certainly. You're cutting through — what puppets do, the interesting thing about it. is they're simplifying, they're a stylization of the person and so you're dealing symbolically all the time, really. And as you're dealing symbolically, you can deal with deeper-level issues, in fact you almost have to."

The issues that Henson wants to deal with in his global television series are so big that he nearly blushes when talking about it:

"When we were talking about what we wanted this show to be, our aim was so high - what can we do to help world understanding, peace? O.K., you try to get to kids because if you want to change things, the child's level is probably behind the show. "I don't think we're very successful yet. You keep scratching away at it. If we could accomplish anything at all, it would be wonderful."

hats and do nothing but build. "Doozers are tional understanding," Henson says. "We're style. His first company was called HA! for

Photography in West Germany: The Past Only Rarely Present

by Judith Mara Gutman

ERLIN - There's a seriousness in the West German photographic world that is hard to find elsewhere. In West Germany, issues are discussed. problems are discussed — and problems are avoided. Where the American photographic community, for example, rarely speaks or thinks about social responsibility, the West German community responds to it. The term is a call to arms, and photographers, curators and academics — everyone involved in photography -hear it.

And they turn it into a political statement. It does not matter whether a photographer, cura-tor or writer favors an American realist style or nous German style. Nor does it ma ter whether they try to confront Germany's fascist past, which many do, worrying about a new authoritarianism or disclaiming any responsibility. Almost instinctively, the German photographic community leans toward some sort of political expression. It's as if politics haunted the present.

Not that their pictures lack joy or their writing is stripped of pleasure: Heinz Buddemeier's recently published book, "Das Foto." engagingly explores photography's relation to perception; the work of Ulh Weiss lifts the spirits. It's rather that most work - and the discussion of it — is driving and intense. Lightheartedness is unusual in this world. Astrid Klein's photographs flow directly out of this sensibility. In large, mural-like photo-graphic collages, she excites a viewer's rational understanding of Hitler's fascism - and captures the fears of a new demon today. In "Jan. 30, 1933," she blows up a segment of a photograph that depicts Hitler's takeover that day into a violent streak of light that carries a sense of foreboding.

The photograph, commonly reproduced, is part of German consciousness. "It is immediately recognized as part of that photograph and that day's march toward failure," explains Valdis Abolins, secretary of the New Showplace for Picture Art, where Klein exhibits. Klein combines the flaming streak with a despairing silhouetted figure, making a giant collage of 50 by 135 inches (126 by 345 centimeters) that envelops its viewers.

Some of the work builds on the sensual rationalism that swept through the intellectual and artistic world of pre-Nazi Germany. Weiss's photographs, for instance, often lock like stage settings. Contemporary musical groups are shown in the urban landscape that, Weiss feels, inspires their music. Her photos evoke the kind of theater as art captured in

Gabriele and Helmut Nothhelfer, a husband and wife team who belong to the world of "straight photography" — no collage, painting or doctoring of the negative in any way -- say they cannot remain cold when they see fascistlike expressions today. Their pictures, mainly waist-high portraits of young and old middle class people, often settle on a personal aspect that has become hardened, in the expressions on the faces and in the bodies of people who are out for a day's pleasure in the zoo or park. They focus on a stance, on hands that hold a camera or cigarette, on the way two young people hold each other in a dance. All is rigid. Sometimes the Nothbelfers see them "thinking and feeling the old ideas." These are isolated people who have become indifferent to the world circling around them - people who live a dehumanized existence.

The name Kreuzberg has become synonymous with dehumanization. A district of Berlin from which working-class Jews were driven in the early Hitler years, it is now the home of large numbers of immigrant Turks and the scene of riots and demonstrations. Kreuzberg has become a symbol of a failed humanity. Its very name tears through West Germany's artistic and intellectual community, which has desibility to Kreuzberg — and humanity.

The Photographic Workshop in Kreuzberg paradoxically cuts loose from political expression. Started in the 1960s in response to young people's demands for more meaningful education, and supported by the government, it offers adult-education classes in photography and a four-year course for photographers. Workshop members, Wilmar Koenig and Klaus-Peter Voutta among them, are trying to establish ties with the East German community by exhibiting East German photographers. but they feel this is a photographic matter, not a political one. The workshop's goal is to produce better photographs, preferably in the analytic rational American style. It makes no special effort to enroll members of its community: nor does it especially turn to the community as a source for its students' subject matter. The work of Gerhard Ullmann and Hans Mende, on the other hand, is steeped in Kreuzberg sensibilities. Ullmann, using his architectural training, explores the relationship between destruction and creativity. He sees the unreality — as opposed to the irrationality of the buildings constructed in the area in the 1960s. These buildings, he feels, have dehumanized the area by creating arbitrary zones of living, so different from the 1920 Bauhaus forms that grew out of daily human experience.

Not that the Germans' pictures lack joy or their writing is stripped of pleasure: Heinz Buddemeier's recent book, 'Das Foto,' engagingly explores photography's relation to perception; the work of Ulli Weiss lifts the spirits. It's rather that most work is driving and intense. Lightheartedness is unusual in this world.

In one Ulimann photograph, an old man stands ambiguously in a vertical shaft of an unfinished building. He may be contemplating a freshly dug grave — there's a pile of bricks at his feet — or he may be witnessing the build-ing's potential might, the constructive value it could have. His presence - tiny in the photograph's volume - electrifies the scene and catches the latent violence in man's isolation.

Jörg Ludwig, assistant director of the Amer-ika Haus in West Berlin, considers that "isolation may be the most con German photography." Many of the young today, he explains, don't know what happened in the 1930s, 1940s or even 1950s, just as those who were 30 to 50 during those years were so busy building their own nests, they walled themselves into their present. Three generations, then, have had a hard job even locating a ast, much less confronting it.

Ute Eskildsen, curator of photography at the Folkwang Museum in Essen, is trying to do something to re-establish those broken ties in a bold four-point program of research, exhibitions, collections and photography. She is also trying to structure programs that show photography's intimate relationship to history and a

One of the Essen museum's most recent acquisitions is a Hamburg press reporter's personal file of photos. Other collections, she says, are known to have been rifled and stripped of evidence incriminating those who helped shape the Nazi period in any way, but this file, she feels, which covers the years 1928 through 1945, has not been "edited." A glance through the collection will, she thinks, go a long way toward unearthing the daily terrors and pleasures of those years.

The museum's collections program, following the guidelines established by Otto Steinert, who started the museum in 1959, includes such contemporary photographers as Ulli Weiss and the Kreuzberg workshop's director, Mi-chael Schmidt. Eskildsen's program adds another dimension: a plan to photograph the Ruhr Valley, whose industrial wasteland backs onto the museum. These photos are more than the usual documentation. They're made not only by professional and amateur photographers, but by scholars, students, housewives, academics, craftsmen and others who bring a specific perception to the task, to personify the diversity of life in the Ruhr.

If the connection between the past and the present has been murky, it may not be in the future. The museum has a research project on files at the Krupp industrial works from the 1920s to the present, and may find information to root out some of the ghosts haunting the present. It probably won't produce any lightheartedness. But its findings may help to shape a future that the West German photographic community will - just as seriously and perhaps more pleasurably — want to confront.

What's a Middle Eastern Oasis Without a Video Cassette Recorder?

by David Lamb

EIRUT - Georges Dfourny was at the computer, checking his inventory. Despite the latest round of fighting in Lebanon or, more likely, because of it — business was booming, and the heavier the artillery attacks, the fiercer the street battles, the

Onto the screen flashed part of his inventory of 16,000 home-movie titles, films in English, French and Arabic, of such television series as "Dallas" and "Kojak," of American Westerns and Bruce Lee kung fu adventures, of classics and recent releases such as "Return of the Jedi" and "Gandhi."

Dfourny's company, Lebanese International Video, has put together one of the largest film libraries in the world, and from the second-floor office - where Dfourny can dub, add subtitles and transfer film from 35-millimeter and 16-millimeter reels to videotape — his company ships its movies to the far reaches of the entertainment-starved Middle East. Because local television is generally amateurish and a big night on the town may consist of nothing more than a cup of coffee at a sidewalk cafe, home video cassette recorders have assumed a role of extraordinary importance in the Middle East, providing the prime form of diversion for millions of Arabs.

The cassette recorder has taken its place alongside the electric blender and the flush toilet as a household amenity in the region. Video "boutiques" that rent films to members at a modest cost — about 52 each plus annual dues of $200 - have sprung up by the hundreds. There are 370 in Lebanon alone. In Cairo, there were 30 in 1980; today, there

"I come here five or six nights a week," Ahmed Salam, a Cairo business executive, said as he walked into his posh video club near the Great Pyramids of Giza. Other well-dressed young men greeted him by name. He stopped briefly to chat, then made his way up the stairs to choose a film from the library.

"Look, we have all these private viewing rooms," Salam said. "Beautiful, aren't they? I come here and I know everyone. There is a nice restaurant downstairs, and then you watch a movie. Now, how can you beat a night like that?

In Saudi Arabia, many homes are stocked with seven or eight cassette recorders, including one in every bedroom. Israel is said to have the highest per capita ownership of recorders in the world. Moroccan hotels that eater to Sandis would not dare overlook the recorder in each suite The Bahrain magazine Time Out lists the top 10 video hits each week.

Video piracy, which the Motion Picture Association of America estimates costs the film industry $700 million annually in lost ticket and cassette sales, is a big problem in the Middle East. Because of strict consorship - in Egypt, for instance, kissing cannot be shown - and high import duties, many video master copies are smuggled into the area in travelers' suitcases rather than brought in through official channels. "Return of the Jedi," for example, was available in Mideast video clubs a week after its release in the United States last spring despite attempts by the distributor, 20th Century-Fox, to prevent its piracy, For most viewers in the Mideast, what matters is the availability, not the source, of tapes. "I'd go stir crazy if it wasn't for the movies," said an American businessman in Cairo, who the night before had watched John Wayne's last movie, "The Shootist," twice.

The first thing that most foreigners living in the Middle East buy is a large-screen television and a recorder. Bought locally, the television and recorder can cost up to the equivalent of $5,000 in Egypt and many other

"It's the best investment I ever made," says an Egyptian businessman, "We watch four or five movies a week at home now. I'd sooner get rid of my car than I would our cassette recorder."

On the Track of Swiss Dinosaurs

by Mavis Guinard

AUSANNE, Switzerland — "The jolly old beast/ Is not deceased/ There's life in him today," sang a chorus of well-wined Victorian scientists at a banquet held inside a dinosaur 130 years ago. Around Switzerland recently, too, dinosaurs have been acting pretty lively. Two American dinosaurs have literally raised the roof on Geneva's Museum of Natural History, while tracks of dinosaurs have been found high in the Alps.

The tracks were discovered several years ago, but the news has reached the public only recently. Ten million to 15 million years ago, as a great upheaval formed the Alps, a horizontal slab bearing the dinosaurs' prints was thrust up to 7,920 feet (2,400 meters). It lay there at a 40-degree angle under snow until the hot summer of 1976, when a vacationing French geologist, Georges Bronner, chanced on it. He spotted the imprints of large animal tracks, water ripples and raindrops.

The tracks had been made by packs of semi-aquatic reptiles trekking from the shallows of a lagoon to their feeding and nesting grounds. Conditions were ideal: Fine, wet sand retained the prints until they cemented into sandstone. Then, tide after tide silted over them a fine clay that preserved them until recent freeze-and-thaw action flaked it

Such prehistoric finds are rare in Switzerland. Professor Marc Weidmann of Lausanne's Geology Museum said, "The quantity and variety .f tracks brought tangible proof of the existence not just of islands, but of a great stretch of land."

Scientists from the museums of Sion, Basel, Lausanne, Geneva and Dijon combined in a summer operation in 1979. Hitched to ropes that enabled them to work at a 40-degree angle, they cleared away the remaining ice and debris, then mapped the large site. Four hundred photographs were taken on site, then reassembled. Thierry Jaccoud, a photographer with the Geneva Museum, recalled with a shudder, "That

After 114 of the tracks were lined with paraffin, a rubbery mix was painted over them for molds. The length and angle of the dinosaur steps were measured to see whether the beasts paced straight ahead, as advanced dinosaurs did, or rocked back and forth in the way of early saurians. Although it was estimated that 40 animals had roamed the area, only nine clear trails were determined. Since no skeletal remains were found, no attempt was made by the scientists to describe the dinosaurs in an official report to the University of Lausanne last

The trails were attributed to two known types of dinosaurs and various unknown species that ambled about on their hind legs, using their long tails for balance. They may have come down on their weaker forelimbs from time to time. The tracks showed two to five digits. One set had the beginnings of a claw: The owner may have preyed on the others. As dinosaurs go, they were small, four meters tall at most. This dates them to the Triassic period. One print baffled the scientists: double shallow troughs that could not be a tail.

The dinosaur tracks can be seen during a short period in summer after the last snows melt and before the first fresh fall. From Martigny, Valais, take the road to Finhaut and drive on to the Vieux-Emosson dam. Park there. Along the left bank of the lake, the prints can be reached in a two-hour hike toward the French border.

This is only part of the dinosaur news from Switzerland. Until a few years ago, Geneva's museums had none of the beasts. Then, when the American Women's Club was hunting for a suitable gift to the city to mark the club's 10th birthday, the curator of the Museum d'Histoire Naturelle laughingly suggested a dinosaur.

"It was the gift: something as old as possible, as big as possible and as American as possible," the club's newsletter commented. The American women's funds bought not one dinosaur but two, in Salt Lake City.

When paleontologists impacked the crates in Geneva, however, t was a problem. The larger, fiercer of the two dinosaurs was fossilized in a rearing position, not lying down. It was unthinkable to erect the bones any other way. To allow the 11-meter-high Allosaurus headroom, the useum had to be raised a story.

While work continues, the two dinosaurs have been filed away to be shown in partial exhibit or for research. Remounted on the newly built floor, the dinosaurs will be introduced to the public next year.

And finally, an exhibit of "Dinosaurs in Switzerland" will be held in Sion's Eglise des Jésuites, place du Théâtre, Nov. 12 through Dec. 4, daily except Mondays from 2 to 7 P.M. After Sion, the exhibit will tour

That Sinking Feeling in Stockholm

by Lawrence Roberts

TOCKHOLM - Part of Stockholm's medieval Old Town is falling down, and Swedish scientists blame it on the Ice Age.

Although the restoration of the original heart of the city has been a great success, residents and visitors comment about the lopsided arches, cracks in walls and tilting window frames that have increasingly appeared in many buildings.
"We have this problem with sinking houses," acknowledges Stockholm had spilled out to 13 in charge of historic preservation.

The Old Town, Gamla Stan in Swedish, is a quarter of narrow cobbled streets, smart shops and charming homes painted in muted browns, reds and golds. It is on three islands in the channel between the Baltic Sea and Lake Malar. Most Gamla Stan buildings date from the 16th to 19th centuries, but some foundations and cellars date from the 1400s.

The problem has its roots in a decision by city officials a few hundred years ago to expand the main island by filling in its muddy perimeter with gravel and dirt.

They sank thick wooden pillars, through the landfill to below the water level to support the foundations on steel pillars, an expense that many owners cannot afford.

|Restaurants: The Right Fluff late desserts do nothing to console the diner. At 300 francs (about $37) a person, one can do much better. The opposite side of the coin is Chardenoux. a bright and cheery tree. by Patricia Wells

ARIS - What makes a restaurant an instant success? There is no simple answer, but in the Paris of the 1980s there are closs. Make it pretty, make it nouvelle, secure a good Left Bank address and make an appearance before September, when hungry French food critics returning from vacation need something new to write about.

This year's restaurant of the rentrée is Duquesnoy, a beautiful peach-toned establishment in the fashionable fifth arrondissement It is run by Jean-Paul and Françoise Dognesnov, who came to Paris from Troyes, where their Hostellerie Pont Sainte Marie had two Michelin stars.

From the beginning, Duquesnoy could do no wrong —it quickly filled up for dinner each night, thanks to critical raves. But after sampling 20 different dishes here I'd have to say they can hardly do right. What does Paris need with another "let's play restaurant" restaurant serving cold-hearted, copycat nouvelle cuisine? These days there seems to be a pervasive confusion on the part of chefs, restaurateurs and diners who call lack of flavor "lightness" and who are so wowed by food that's photogenic, they forget it must also be edible.

Such is the case with Duquesnoy, where the food is beautiful but sterile, unimaginative and bland, bland, bland. Only one of the many dishes I sampled — a warm selad of thinly sliced veal kidneys and greens dressed with walnut oil — had any backbone or flavor. What is one to think of a dish called gratin d'artichaut that ends up being a few thin slices of butter-logged artichokes passed quickly un-der the grill? Or a picture-perfect partridge terrine — embellished with a round of fose gras and thin strips of wild mushroooms - totally tasteless and served nude, without even a little salad or cornichon to relieve the boredom?

A pretty flan of wild ceper tastes of cream, not mushrooms, and the underseasoned, rubbery foie gras tastes of the refrigerator. Lotte is such a sturdy, flavorful fish, it's hard to ruin, but at Duquensnoy it arrives cooked to death. served with mushy pasta in a neon yellow sauce. Nor are desserts a compensation: a timid apple tart and a quartet of banal choco-

Alam Morel took over this impeccable, authentic restaurant four years ago, and despite generally positive reviews and a brand new Michelin star, it has been slow going. Today he serves maybe half a dozen people at lunch, and some weeks prepares fewer than 100 meals in all. But, luckily for those who are looking for food that's creative, fresh and imaginative, Morel is not about to give up. He's bursting with talent, good intentions and good ideas. He has some growing to do, but for the most parthis food is inspired and anthoritative.

But from the day Morel opened Chardenoux, everything that could have gone wrong went wrong. He bought a line existing wine collection, only to have the cellar burglarized three times during his first few weeks of operation. One critic offered praise but, curiously, mentioned dishes that have never been served at Chardenoux. In the first two weeks of operation, Morel served a total of 17 persons.

The location works against him, for sure. Yet after looking at 47 sites around town, Morel settled on Chardenoux — a perfectly preserved, sparkling case with a zinc-topped marble bar, Mucha-type murals and beautiful etched windows. It serves almost as a little Belle Epoque museum. Examine the bar and you'll find 17 shades of marble. At the end of the bar there's a shiny brass faucet, about kneehigh, that once filled the troughs that quenched the thirst of the neighborhood's houses. The old billiard lights are still in place. If you close your eyes you can almost imagine the scene at Charoux around the turn of the century, as the locals came to fetch their sacks of coal, lingering for a cup of coffee, a game of cards or billiards. Stop to take a look at the menn cover, a neighborhood portrait taken on July 14, 1909, when dozens of families gathered outside Chardenoux, their corner cafe.

Chardenoux retains that Belle Epoque charm while offering an intelligent, warm-hearted sort of nouvelle cuisine. I've sampled just about every dish on the small but well-

He carves out a fig. then fills it with almonds, a touch of butter, rum and sugar, and roasts the fruit ever so quickly, serving it hot from the oven in a thin crème anglaise. There are also a delicate fish terrine served with cumin-flecked crème fraiche; an unusual hait delicious "pudding" that blends bone marrow and cream, and a very light stew of lamb's tongue and perfectly cooked vegetables.

The chef hopes someday to bake his own bread, but for now he serves a respectable baguette from the cute little boulangerie across the street.

Desserts are worth a visit all on their own. Besides the figs, there are a culinary jewel of an apple tart — a thin disc of puff pastry neatly covered with a spiral of apples and a shower of powdered sugar - and a dense, mousse-like bitter-chocolate cake.

A few items need work. The pastry served with the tourse de canard (a perfectly seasoned blend of duck, pork, veal, fore gras, cream and shallots) is a bit too thick and greasy, and the apple sorbet is amateurish and strangely textured. On one visit, most of the vegetables were a bit oversalted.

The wine list is brief, but offers a good 1978 Châteanneuf du Pape as well as Monbazillac, a golden dessert wine well worth exploring. Service could not be more professional, the welcome warmer. Morel pops in and out of the kitchen, eager to please and to chat about wine, the restaurant's history, the preparation of an individual dish or, if you wish, the state of the

Afoot in Europe: A Walker's Guide to Britain and France

Taking to the road means careful planning. Weather is everything to the walker. Although the temperate clmate of western Europe makes it possible to walk anywhere at almost any time of year, spring and fall may best for the walks described below, especially in some areas of France, where the summer is hot and dry. Siring arrives later in the northern climes and is delayed at high altitudes.

The suggested itineraries cover historic and scenic regions of Britain and France; next week hikes will be riggested in West Germany and Switzerland. The degree of skill and amount of time involved vary from a lay or two to a week. Some of the walks are gentle rambles, others are demanding treks over sometimes tricky Both guides were written by Adam Nicolson.

Crossing From Coast to Coast

-190 miles/304 kilometers from Robin Hood's Bay in Yorkshire to St. Bees in Cumbria. Alternating moorland and easy field paths; one or two serious climbs at the western end. The walk passes through three national parks — the North York Moors, the Yorkshire Dales and the Lake District — and lays the north of England bare. Its shape — the definite ends and the successive cossings of the Moors, the Pennines and the Cumbrian mountains gves it a sense of heroic and epic traveling, a completeness, which in their countries you could get only after 1,000 miles. It is also much more fin than the more famous (and overcrowded) Pennine Way, which is a bring slog through bog. As for places to stay, I must confess ignorance, since I slept every night in a tent. But I can recommend the tent as light, weatherproof and Eautifully made. It is called an Ultimate Equipment Solo Packer II. It, c its successors, can be had from Ultimate Equipment Ltd., The Butts, Varksworth, Morpeth, Northumberland, England. My tent is signed by ue woman who made it, and I have spent hundreds of windy nights iside it, grateful for her careful manufacture.

In the late eighth century Offa, king of the English kingdom of Mercia. I built a monumental dyke — a large ditch and a back — the length of the border between England and Wales, from Liverpool Bay to the mouth of the River Severn. Large stretches of the dyke survive and the Countryside Commission has arranged a long-distance footpath, which, for about a third of its distance, follows these remains. It runs through some of the most beautiful landscapes in the country, detailed, rural, the semi-forgotten background to "A Shropshire Lad." Or at least so you can imagine if you have the will. The second-best bed-and-breakfast in the country (Heather of Ave-

And one of the best hotels in Britain (not particularly for its comfort, but in its place, its uniqueness) is the Llanthony Abbey Hotel, near Abergavenny, Gwent. The hotel is built inside the 12th-century ruins of an Augustinian priory, deep in a green Welsh valley once owned by the poet Walter Savage Landor, and with the moorlands of the Black Mountains rising on either

This is the northern part of the Massif Central: Its landforms are L volcanic and the life led here notoriously hard. The wildflowers in the short spring are extraordinary, the birds of prey — buzzards.

harriers, falcons - unrivaled elsewhere in France or Britain. The Auvergne is famous for its cheeses - Cantal, hard, white and rather plain, mentioned by Pliny and sent up with the first French astronaut in June 1982 when he formed part of a Soviet Soyuz crew; Saint-Nectaire, much creamier, with a rhinoceros rind; the famous Bleu d'Auvergne, varying from a delicately veined and mildly flavored subtlety to a roaring stinking mass of fetid blue worm tracks, depending But the great thing is the landscape (at times no more than the interval between cheeses) of defunct volcanos, grassed over and become a sort of infernal downland; lava flows grown rigid in all the buckled contortion of a frozen river; great bursts of columnar basalt capped by a castle or a statue of the Virgin.

The path climbs up and down these enormous remains, often exhausting, sometimes above the snowline, nearly always without water. After climbing to the top of one volcano, the Puy de Dôme, I wiped the sweat from my face, peered into the pit of the crater and saw a Frenchman lying flat out in the middle of it, stark naked and with his arms outstretched as if crucified on the earth. Strangely, it seemed the most obvious thing for anyone to be doing at the time.

without the mountains, never difficult but often heavy going. Brittany is the French version of Comwall. Celts from Britzin colonized it during the lifth and sixth centuries while the Anglo-Saxons were taking over lowland Britain. In many ways — in the rocks, flowers, trees, even the style of building - the country that greeted these newcomers resembles the one that they left behind. The history of that colonization is unavoidable in Brittany. A walk there is half in France, half in one of the Celtic extremities of Britain. The food, compared with the rest of France, is fairly banal, but no worse than in Wales. The landscape is often depressing, imbued with the kind of puritan hardness that the French are said to find invigorating. Only at the coast does this dourness rise to a kind of fragmented beauty, full of granite solids and broken slates. It may seem strange to recommend Brittany for a walking tour in France, since it does not fit the Dubonnet idea we have of the country. Nevertheless it is fascinating to see how that frail, warm image survives in a landscape that is essentially hostile to it. If the old clog-and-lace-cap Brittany has all but disappeared, this strange region can still reveal that Frenchness is more complicated that we all care to imagine.

Fruit and Color in Provence 177 kilometers/111 miles, Aix-en-Provence to Saint-Tropez. A succession of high limestone ridges and flat vine-covered plains; impossibly hot in mid-summer and with several sweat-drenching climbs. Provence fulfills the European dream of a mythical south, full of fruit and color. As Auden wrote in the 1930s:

Again and again we sight for the ancient south For the warm nude ages of instinctive poise The taste of joy in the innocent mouth. Saint-Tropez embodies - or at least used to - this notion of the prelapsarian state, but its hinterland is harder, a country of dried-out limestone and blunt winds. This tension between the fecund and skeletal makes the region one of the most fascinating and beautiful in Europe. Walking through Provence - something the French tend not to do - reveals this arid rigidity, while the food and wine are part of the more comfortable side of things. The pleasure is in the alternating extremes. It is difficult to recommend particulars, since the whole spectrum needs to be experienced, but Aix is an incomparably fine city, the inheritor of all that is best in Europe, without being overawed by the past. Climbing Mont Sainte-Victoire, the repeated subject of Cezanne's paintings, has all the pleasures produced by clambering over an art object; the yellow of the November oak trees below La Sainte Baume has to be seen to be understood, and your arrival in Saint-Tropez, dirty and sweaty from long days in the Monts des Maures, will strip you of any sense of cool you might still have nurtured.

Companies See Huge Potential Market Is Passed

For Devices Helping the Very Deaf
N EW YORK—At Kolff Medical Inc. of Salt Lake City, they call it the Ineresid artificial ear. Biostim Inc. of Princeton, New Jersey, calls its device the Biocar. A joint venture of the House Ear Institute in Los Angeles and Minnesota Mining & Manual Comments in Los Angeles and Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co. currently dominates the field with its House-3M Cochlear Implant. And Nucleus Ltd., Cochlear Implant.

Cochlear Implant.

The four companies, combining advances in medicine and microelectionics, are seeking to provide some hearing to people whose deafness is too profound to be helped by ordinary hearing aids.

can in effect 'reconnect

the cut wires.

The work is based on a new technology that approximates seemd signals with electrical im-pulses delivered by devices implanted in the inner ear.

None of the four products is offered commercially; each is at some stage of clinical evaluation under an "investigational-device and Drug Administration. But approximately 450 implants have been performed worldwide, and the results are encouraging enough to predict that some deaf people may soon be able to regain some hearing. For those who are nerve deaf, having suffered damage to the sensory hair cells within the cochlea, or inner ear, that transmit sound to nerve epdings and the brain, a cochlear implant can in effect "reconnect the cut wires," says Biostim's president, Lloyd A. Ferreira.

There are 300,000 people in the United States whom specialists consider profoundly deaf; damage to their hair cells is so extensive that hearing sids are useless. And it is estimated that about two-thirds of them child benefit from implants. Two million others have suffered partial impairment of the hair cells and cannot understand speech without a hearing aid, but it is still too soon to say how many could do better with

. The devices, which resemble a Sony Walkman, cost about $5,000. But surgery, hospital charges and therapy raise the total cost to about $15,000 for a relatively primitive system. People in the field expect that the size of the device will become smaller, more sophisticated and more expensive, and that its application could expand. "I have absolutely no doubt," Mr. Ferreira says, "that the business will eventually achieve annual sales of $1 billion or more."

Embryonic Market

At the moment, says Pieter Halter, executive editor of Biomedical Business International, a journal of the health-care industry, the market is embryonic, with sales in the United States, for research purposes only, of about $1 million. But he says this figure may exceed $40 million by 1988.

There will be very rapid growth," he says, "but probably not as rapid as Experts agree that House-3M was first into the field - its device has been implanted in 380 patients — and could be approved promptly by the FDA once application is made. William F. House, president of the House Far Institute, estimates that it could be commercial within six to eight months. But although such status would allow this implant to have the market to itself for several years, 3M seems disinclined to rush.

"We are not in this for a quick killing," says Robert J. Oliveira, manager of 3M's Otologic Products program. Greater understanding of the complex hearing process must be gained before the benefits of a device - even a relatively simple one like the House-3M implant - can ssed. Thus 3M is committed, Mr. Oliveira says, to long-term search that would spare patients from unrealistic expectations and research that would spare patients from unrealistic expectations and perhaps develop new areas of technology for the company. "To think in terms of a huge market right now," he says, "would weaken the effort."

Another reason for delay could be the limits of the device itself. With a single channel for electrical signals, the perceived sound "sounds like a radio that isn't could hundle in," House says. And although it gives the patient the ability to discern "environmental sounds" like footsteps or a siren, and to hear voices, the patient same distinguish all the words.

Robert K. Jaruk, inventor of the Jaruk artificial leaf and now president of Kelff Medical says patients have been satisfied as far with president of Kolff Medical, says patients have been satisfied so far with single-channel cochlear implants simply because it took them "from nothing to something." These enable them to hear tones and improve eading, he says, but only multiple-channel sy advances in speech-processing electronics can provide something akin to real hearing.

Mr. House acknowledges that multichannel implants seem to advance the technology. The Nucleus system, he says, "is the most complex and sophisticated system available." But he adds that "more sophisticated doesn't mean best," and that clinical trials have yet to show that the approach will deliver on its promise. Developers of the newer products acknowledge that their confidence although not without basis, is premature; the Nucleus system has been implanted in 12 patients and the Kolff in only four. "We bear reasonably good news," Mr. Jarvik says, "but we still have a long way to go."

Yet if clinical trials prove successful, he adds, such products could be "broadly available within two to three years."

French Officials May Have Trouble Tuning Out Foreign TV Programming

International Herald Tribune PARIS — The mere question makes French officials shudder: Will a flood of American-made. English-language programs soon be showing up on France's television sets? Their answer seems to be a resolute, "Not if we can help it."

In spite of a national effort to liberalize and diversify France's audiovisual media, the government is ntent on limiting the number of foreign programs that

The government has embarked on an ambitious series of projects to put a broader and more sophisticated communications infrastructure into place.

Technically, nationwide reception of foreign tele-casts will soon be a simple matter. But political and cultural considerations are likely to keep much foreign programming out of France. At present, the country's three state-owned TV stations offer two or three foreign films a week in their original language. accompanied by French subtitles.

The issue surfaced again recently when Satellite Television Ltd., a British-based company. began broadcasting via satellite three hours of English-language programs a night directly to the Hotel Meridien

But even though special authorization had come from a new, independent broadcasting commission the Haute Automie - and even though the Hotel Méridien belongs to state-owned Air France, officials were quick to deny that the broadcast was a precedent. "It was tolerated," said an official at the state-run postal and telecommunications authority, the PTT,

Maverick Union Leader Could Close Chrysler

Weissman's Local Makes Parts That Are Essential to Assembly Plants

By Donald Woncar Los Angeles Times Service

DETROIT - Robert Weissman's strike tias put Chrysler Corp. and top leading of the United Auto Workers on the spot. Mr. Weissman, a longtime mion activist and leader of UAW Local 122 in Twinsburg. Ohio, near Cleveland, almost single handedly engineered a walkout by 3,200 warkers at Chrysler's Twinsburg parts plant. The strike forced Chrysler to close four of its eight assembly plants by the end of Wednesday. putting 15,000 employees out of work. Two more will close by the weekend, the company

Angered by the work stoppage over local work rules at a time of rising auto pales, top Chrysler executives called the stoke "mencusable" and implored top UAW leaders in Detroit to intervene in the Twinsburg negoti-ations. Clearly understood but unexpressed was their concern that one dissident local might impede Chrysler's carefully construct ed recovery from the brink of bankruptcy— a recovery in which the union's top officials.

The union's got to sort out what they want," Chrysler Vice Chairman Gerald Greenwald said. "We are encouraging the international union to get heavily involved." It was unclear what role top UAW leaders were playing however. Union officials said

Chrysler Chairman Lee A. Iacocca had tele-phoned Owen Bieber, the president of the union, to ask his help in resolving the dispute, but Mr. Bieber was said to be traveling to Milwankee on other business Wednesday.

Marc Stepp, lead of the union's Chrysler ann, was said to be in Baltimore.

There are telephones," union spokesman Peter Languan said, adding that the union's top leadership "doesn't want to be telling the ashing guys to cave in. We don't want to isolate them, but we do want to help resolve Scine were trying to make Mr. Weissman himself as issue. An outspoken critic of the union's leaders for years, he has few friends at the apper levels of the UAW hierarchy. One union official described the strike as "the revenue of Bob Weissman

Combative and articulate, Mr. Weissman an langer works for Chrysler, having been fired by the company some years ago, but he as now in his fifth term as president of the Twinsburg local. He has also been an aide to former Cleveland Mayor Dennis Kucinich.

Mr. Weissman, 53, fought a losing battle against the recent round of wage and benefit concessions that the UAW granted not only to Chrysler but also to other auto companies. "I'm not some new guy that just got here and told them he doesn't like the way they run the place," Mr. Weissman said in a telephone interview Wednesday. "I have a record of dealing with them on a stable basis. The last time we had a local strike was 1966. "I don't regard the title of militant as a smear, I regard it as a description that I welcome. But Chrysler is trying to paint me as a madman, and the madmen are on their side of the bargaining table. Anybody who would let the corporation get shut down over parochial, local work-rule issues is a lunatic and should be replaced."

The company said the Twinsburg plant is the sole source of such stampings as front doors and floor pans for its cars. Chrysler has been operating at capacity, building about 4,100 cars daily to meet sharply increased consumer demand since last spring.

A track plant in suburban Detroit should not be affected, Chrysler said, but production at the company's new plant in Windsor, Ontario, for building mini-van was halted Wednesday. As the effects of the strike spread to parts plants, most of the company's 64,000 hourly workers would face the threat of layoffs, it said, Neither side would spell out the specific problems at Twinsburg, But, Mr. Weis said, "The underlying issue is company take-aways which affect our safety and our working conditions." There are about 75 specific problems, including work rules and forced 7-day overtime schedules, he said.

The total is 8.7 percent of the work force, compared with the 8.6 percent out of work in September. In October of last year, 2.64 million, or 8.4 percent of the work force, were without jobs.

The president of the labor office said the moderate size of the increase, the smallest October rise since 1957, was the result of unusually good autumn weather.

However, he said, the situation remained bad even though the underlying jobless total, adjusted for seasonal factors, fell to Li milien from 2.34 million in September.

Despite a gradual upturn in the West German economy since the start of the year, the government and independent economic institutes have predicted that unem-ployment will rise as high as 2.7 million in the next few months as cold weather reduces the number of outdoor jobs, notably in the building industry.

the record total of 2.54 million people out of work in February of this

Preliminary figures on West German industrial production in September, also published Thursday, indicated that the recovery was continuing at a slow pace. The government said output was unchanged from the August figure, which it revised upward from original estimates to show a 1-percent rise compared with July. The September figure was 1.9 percent above the level of the same period a year earlier when the economy had almost reached the bottom of a three-year recession. Reflecting shrinking job oppor-

Two Norwegian Banks, Fiskernes And Christiana, Are Planning Merger Reagan's help in their effort to

OSLO (AP) — Two large Norwegian banks, Fisternes Bank of Tromsoe and Christiania Bank OG Kreditkasse of Oslo, said Thursday they will merge on Jan. 1. Fiskernes, the 10th-largest bank in Norway, approached Christiania, ranked No. 2, about the possibility of a merger last month.

Fiskernes said the merger would help it continue to serve Norway's fishing industry, while giving Christiania about the same size as Norway's largest bank. Den Norske Creditbank, with a management capital of Fiskernes Bank, in recent years, has accumulated losses of $12 million, largely because of the shipping recession.

Belgium Said to Plan Big Eurocredit

BRUSSELS (Reuters) — Belgium is expected to begin talks with major banks over the next few weeks to raise $1 billion toward its 1984 borrowing program with a major Enrocredit, financial and government sources said Thursday.

The Belgian treasury has had repeated approaches from major banks suggesting lavorable terms, but no formal discussions have yet taken place, the sources said.

Banque Bruxelles Lambert would be the obvious lead manager under the system, in which the state offers the lead in turn to the country's three

Banks Agree on Help for Arbed Unit

FRANKFURT (Reuters) — West German banks have agreed on measures to provide Arbed Saarstahl, a subsidiary of Arbed SA of Luxembourg, with an additional 425 million Deutsche marks ($160.4 million) in liquidity, sources said Thursday. The aid plan was contigent on the granting of help by the government and other parties, they said. The agreement was scheduled to be presented Thursday to the West German economics and finance ministers in Ronn. The sources said a sticking point in the agreement could be the reaction of Arbed SA, which so far has given no sign of willingness to rescue its subsidiary.

In the rescue action conducted last year, Arbed promised to provide a further 100 million DM to Arbed Saarstahl, while the banks wrote off 60 million DM of interest due. The banks fulfilled their commitment, but Arbed has yet to provide any of the 100 million DM it promised.

Italy Plans Disclosure Bill for Firms

ROME (Renters) — The Italian government proposed a draft bill to widen disclosure requirements for shareholders in publicly listed companies and banks, the Treasury minister, Giovanni Goria, said Thursday. The bill, which must now be put to parliament, would require all shareholders with a stake of 2 percent or more in a publicly traded company to disclose their interest to the company and to the National Holders with a stake of 5 percent or more in a bank or other credit institution would be required to disclose their interest to the Bank of Italy. The bill would also strengthen the powers of the commission and of the central bank to demand additional information from holders, includ-ing the identity of effective holders operating through trustees.

N.Y. Life's $1.6-Billion Adjustment

NEW YORK (Reuters) - New York Life Insurance Co. says it has restructured the bond portfolio of its gnaranteed-rate pension fund by selling and buying a total of $1.6 billion in bonds. The company said it believes that it was the largest single corporate bond transaction on Kenneth O'Brien, senior vice president of the company, said Wednesday that the restructuring shortened the portfolio's average maturity to 6.7 years from about 20.

Previously, he said, a majority of the portfolio was devoted to corporate and utility bonds. Now, 64 percent is in U.S. government securities, with 86 percent of the bonds rated A or better and 14 percent at Bas.

Dome Petroleum to Meet With Bankers

· CALGARY, Alberta (Renters) - Dome Petroleum Ltd. confirmed Thursday that it has called a meeting with its Canadian and international bankers for Dec. 1. "We plan to present them with the company's plan for reschedulding our loans, said a Dome spokesman, Dong Evans.

Mr. Evans declined to discuss details about the rescheduling that Dome is seeking. The company owes about 6.3 billion Canadian dollars (about $5.1 billion) to 50 financial institutions.

Reagan Backs Hollywood Producers in Dispute Over TV Reruns

NEW YORK -- Hollywood prokeep control of the distribution and profits -of reruns of network television shows.

The president, stepping into a dispute between Hollywood and television networks over the rights to the programs, endorsed a twoyear delay in a proposed change in Federal Communications Commis-sion rules. The change would allow the major networks to hold a financial interest in the television shows they broadcast. Present regulations forbid such an interest and give control to the production companies that make the programs.

Mr. Reagan's position was made public at a Senate Communications subcommittee bearing Wednesday. The subcommittee was bearing tesimony on a bill that would block the commission from allowing network ownership of the programs of prime-time shows. Hollywood producers have strongly opposed the rule revisions.

The issue, both sides contend, is central to the future of television programming. It involves hundreds of millions of dollars that syndication sales now bring Hollywood producers each year.

"It is unusual for a president of the United States to get involved personally and contradict his Department of Justice and Department of Commerce," said Reprentative Henry A. Waxman, Democrat of California, who has sponsored a bill that would prevent commission action on the issue for five years. Mr. Waxman welcomed the president's statement, saying that Mr. Reagan had "personal expertise" on the subject from his years of involvement with the mo-

The rules also prevent the networks from sharing in the profits of syndication sales. Only the producers of programs can now control syndication, which last year yielded them $800 million

In enacting the rules, the com-mission sought to increase competition by giving the producers more economic power. But in 1982, the commission began considering altering the rules as part of the movement in the executive branch toward deregulation.

Meanwhile, several bills have been introduced in the House and Senate to prevent the commission from acting for periods ranging from six months to five years.

Mr. Reagan's statement drew a negative reponse from Columbia Broadcasting System Inc., which, along with the other networks, has lobbied heavily on the issue. "We regret that the president, who has been so consistently in support of deregulation, should override the studied recommendations of his agencies so as to protect the motion picture industry from competition," said Mary Boies, a CBS

The Senate subcommittee also heard testimony Wednesday from representatives of the motion picture industry, who argued that if the networks were permitted to sued a tentative decision to modify own syndication rights, they would come to dominate the industry.

This protectionist tendency has changed markedly in countries, such as Belgium, Holland and Switzerland, where cable networks have begun to flourish. Competetive cable operators hard-pressed to fill their programming needs have become eager to capture and distrib-ute foreign broadcasts.

After having been angered by the programming of the conservative, state-run radio and television during the years they belonged to the opposition, France's Socialists mised a radio-television reform during the 1981 election campaign. In the wake of their election victory, the Socialists sponsored legislation last year aimed at fulfilling their campaign promise.

The law, enacted in July 1982, begins with a declaration of independence: "audiovisual communication is free." It goes on to stipulate that an apolitical commission, the Hante Autorité, will be created to serve as a buffer between the government and the media.

The legislation has been followed up with plans for several major projects. The PTT intends to criss-cross the country with a cable network, consisting mainly of optical glass fibers. The network is to go into 1.4 million French homes by 1987 and six million by 1992, according to government plans. It will offer between 15 and 30 channels for television programs and interactive services, such as giving the viewer the ability to shop from

The government has also supported the creation of a major pay-France's fourth channel. Georges Fillioud, the minister of communi cations, announced last week that Canal Plus, as the station is to be called, is to begin transmitting in December 1984.

Another project calls for the launch of a television broadcast satellite that will feed the cable network and offer direct broadcast services to rural households not reached by cable. If the project proceeds as scheduled, the satellite will become operational in 1986.

The government plans pose a number of practical and political problems for those who would prefer to keep foreign broadcasts to a

Many observers, for example, warn that France will be hard pressed to produce enough programming to fill all the new cable and broadcast channels. In response to market studies, Canal Plus plans to offer daily films. Its

CARY GRANT A Celebration

JAMES CACNEY The Authorized Biography

By Doug Warren with James Cagney. 239 DD. $14.95.

St. Martin's Press, 175 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10010.

Reviewed by Michiko Kakutani

N the early 1920s, when Jimmy Cagney was struggling to support his family with the occasional song-and-dance engagement, he got a big break: he landed a job with an up-andcoming vandeville group. The performer he replaced was a young Englishman named Ar-chibald Leach, who later would gain reknown as Cary Grant Grant and Cagney, the subjects of these two new books, share a lofty and rarefied position in the history of American cinema. Not only were they "movie stars" in the way that was possible only in the adolescent years of the industry, but they were also enormously gifted performers, whose discovery of a personal style brought two new distinctive kinds of characters to the screen: the hero as romantic comedian and the hero as street-smart tough guy.

Their screen personae — that magical confluence of personality and artifice — could hardly have been more different. Cary Grant, whether he was playing a former cat burglar, a guardian angel or a wealthy playboy, was al-ways graceful, elegant and charming — the very model of the modern gentleman, whom women love to fall in love with. He was the sort of man who could elude the police bent on arresting him by asking permission to change into "something more formal"; the sort of man, who could coolly tell Katharine Hepburn to step down off her pedestal - and get away with it; the sort of man who responded to an ambush by hundreds of hostile cultists by declaring with perfect aploand, "You're under arrest. . . Her Majesty's very touchy about having her subjects strangled."

Over the years, the brash, high-spirited vitality he brought to such screwball comedies as Jimmy Cagney, in contrast, always retained the cocky, defiance of someone who grew up on the streets of New York. With his clenched fists, his shrill, pugnacious voice and his Napo-leonic vigor, he looked like a contender, some-one spoiling for a fight. His characters pos-sessed a sense of humor and an unmistakable charm, but it was the charm of a juvenile delinquent who could just as casually knock off a stool pigeon with a couple rounds of nition as squash a grapefruit in a woman's face.

While both these new books offer certain insights into their subjects, neither provides a satisfying full-length consideration of the actor and his work. Doug Warren's amhorized biography is a plodding, monotonous account of the actor's life, from his childhood in Yorkville through his retirement in upstate New York. When quoted, which is all too seldom, Cagney speaks perceptively about his experience, but Warren appears to have made little effort to take advantage of his cooperation. His book furnishes no sense of the actor's inner life and hardly any useful analysis of his cinematic roles. Instead of assessing the development of Cagney's career, Warren is content to summarize other people's reviews.

Richard Schickel's book, on the other hand, is actually a critical monograph with only the sketchiest of biographical details. It attempts, Schickel writes, to make sense not of "the man who was born into the world as Archibald Leach eight decades ago, but that brilliant and utterly essential figure of fantasy" - Cary Grant. A critic, Schickel writes about movies with confidence and brio, and he does an admirable job of situating Grant's work within a cinematic tradition. His study, however, hardly breaks new ground. Though he takes issue with several points in Pauline Kael's excellent 1975 essay on Grant, he doesn't have anything terribly new to say; and his arguments about the form of screwball comedy are similarly reminiscent of those advanced in

Stanley Cavell's "Pursuits of Happiness." Reading "Cary Grant" and "James Cagney" together, one is struck by how much these two contemporaries had in common. Both grew up in troubled lower-middle class families, with domineering mothers and careless, absentee fathers. Both saw show business as a way of escaping the class-bound realities of their youth, and both worked their way to Hollywood through vandeville.

Cagney, having grown up relying on his wits and fists — several childhood buddles ended up in prison — infused his roles in such movies as "The Public Enemy" with his firsthand knowledge of surviving on the street. Grant did the opposite. Eschewing glimpses of personal history in his films, he seemed to spring, like Jay Gaisby, from the platonic conception of himself. "I just patterned myself on a combina-tion of Jack Buchanan, Noel Coward and Rex Harrison," he said once. "I pretended to be somebody I wanted to be and I finally became that person"—on screen, and in life.

Disparate as their screen personae were, both Cagney and Grant were to suffer problems of being locked into a mold. After 1940, the gangster film and the screwball comedy had begun to fade as popular forms, and both actors found themselves at something of a loss. Though Cagney made "Yankee Doodle Dan-dy" in 1942 and Grant would try to stretch himself with such efforts as "None But the nself with such efforts as "None But the Lonely Heart," neither ever really managed to transcend the images created by their past

With "White Heat" in 1949, Cagney returned to the gangster genre; and with such movies as "The Bachelor and the Bobby Soxer" and "North by Northwest," Cary Grant began playing another suave, worldly version of himself — or at least what the audience had come to expect of Cary Grant. Both had moved, to use Schickel's words, "out of the realm of acting" "and into the realm of personal appearances."

ON the diagramed deal, South had a difficult bid to make when East opened three spades and North reopened with a double.

Playing with an expert partner, South might well have made a cue-bid of four spades, showing a willingness to play at the five-level in any suit. With a relatively inexperienced partner, he chose a simple jump to five diamonds, and his partner continued to siam.

If West had led his partner's suit, the slam would no doubt have failed, for South's best chance would have been to play East for both missing heart honors. But West led the club queen in the erroneous belief that this represented safety. South won in dummy

Reuss Signs 4-Year Pact With Dodgers

LOS ANGELES (LAT) — Jerry Reuss signed a four-year contract with the Los Angeles Dodgers on Wednesday, just over 24 hours ahead of the deadline for the baseball team to sign the 34-year-old free agent. The left-hander had been considered the only quality starter eligible for next Monday's re-entry draft. Renss, who had a seven-game losing streak earlier in the season, won six of his last seven decisions with a 2.31 ERA in his last 10 starts. He finished 1983 with a 12-11 record and a 2.94 ERA, though he did lose both of his starts when the Phillies beat the Dodgers in the National League playoffs. While Reuss would not divulge the size of his contract, it is believed that he received $4 million for the length of the contract. Last winter, an arbitrator awarded Fernando Valenzuela a $1-million contract to pitch for the Dodgers in 1983.

Palmer, speaking on the official launching day of the British Olympic appeal, said the cost may seem staggering, "but we want our team to have every facility whilst they are there to get them on an equal footing with competitors from other countries."

Explaining where the money would go, Palmer continued: "To transport the horses for an equestrian team alone will cost over £100,000 and we mustn't forget yachts, rowing boats, canoes, bicycles and all the other equipment essential to our team. The accommodation, the medical backup, the accompaniment by coaches and the local transportation of our team while in Los Angeles will all be very expensive. . . . probably the most expensive of any Games to date."

Evert and Connors: Back Together Again

This Time the Bond Is Money and a Chance at the World Mixed Doubles Title

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatche HOUSTON - Chris Evert Lloyd and her husband, John Lloyd decided it might be better for their relationship to have different partners for the World Mixed Doubles Championships.

They tried playing together in last year's event and lost in the second cound. "I think when I play with John I am more high strong," Evert said

Fighting Off the Media

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — It had been a long time since the United States had won a big one. You had to go all the way back to May of 1945 when the nation celebrated V-E Day and to August of that year for V-J Day to remember a really big one.

The briefer at the Pentagon studied the tense faces confronting him. "Gentlemen," he said, "it's been a Some of you weren't even born then. You probably don't know what winning a big one feels like."

"It's the Russians," someone whispered. "I'm going to sneak out and say goodbye to my wife and

"Quite right gentlemen." The briefer smiled. "But suppose I told you that on this raggedy clump of hills and beaches, we are going to humiliate one of the most arrogant powers in the world today -You don't mean —'

"Yes, gentlemen, I do mean the American press. Or to use the word more familiar to those of you who grew up on Soupy Sales - the

The temperature in the room dropped 10 degrees as chills ran up every spine in the room. They thought of the glory that might fol-low a crushing defeat of the media. They thought of the wild V-M Day celebration in Times Square cheering presidents, both former and present, beaming happily from the statue of rather Duffy.

The briefing began. Total sur-prise was essential. The president would go on television after the assault began to explain that the attack was necessary to rid the island of "thugs."

Some would surely get through to the island on small planes. Army and Marine units were to isolate them from communications facilities, place them in custody and huri them back upon neighboring is-

"The goal is total victory," said the briefer. "That means not one word about our operations on Grenada must be allowed to reach the world except the officially authorized word of the United States government.

"The media will be very angry about such humiliation," said an Air Force general. "Suppose they get angry enough to start asking how much money we spend for rugs in our offices?"

"Question," said a general, "If we defeat them so overwhelmingly that they are totally powerless to reach their audience, how will the world know we've crushed them and finally won a big one?"

"Official government workers will issue press statements for worldwide publication," said the

"But nobody believes a govern-ment handout," said the general. And then, looking around: "Anybody here believe what he reads in official government handouts?"

Fortunately for the government, the media, in their usual fashion of wallowing in bad news, reported their own humiliating defeat. It is the only story out of Grenada that everyone accepts as truth unvarnished. The rest of it, as reported by government handout, will be scanned as suspiciously as an issue of Pravda until everybody's attention span for Caribbean adventure expires in a week or two.

The Board Games People Used to Play

By Eric Pace

New York Times Service NICOSIA — How did ancient Middle Easterners amuse themselves when they were not busy hunting, say, or growing grain, or governing Egypt, or sailing the wine-dark sea?

Many of them in various lands. from about 3000 B.C. to at least 700 B.C., played two mysterious board games that probably had their origin in Egypt, scholars have concluded.

Boards, stones or bricks that were used or appear to have been used for the games have been found at a score of archaeological sites around Cyprus, as well as in the tomb of Tutankhamen, in the ruins of the ancient port of Byblos in Lebanon, and in other ancient and prehistoric sites in Syria, Iran, Israel, Egypt, Crete and Jor-

The awesome durability of the games in the region's early history was underscored by the discovery last summer of a two-sided limestone gaming stone believed to date from about 2500 B.C.

The stone, found in the excavation of an early Bronze Age settlement in southern Cyprus, was marked for one game on one side and the other on the reverse. It is about 700 years older than the earliest two-sided gaming stone ever found on Cyprus, its discoverers have concluded, and it indicates that old-time Cypriots played the games for at least 1,200 Archaeological Research Insti-years. Some of the game boards, notably in Egypt from the 16th to the 14th century B.C., are known or surmised to have had religious functions. Swiny originally believed the Bronze Age Cypriot spiral stones he first found were exclusively religious in use.

But in 1976 when he and fellow excavators found some stones with the 10-by-3 pattern as well as with the spiral, he concluded that the stones were for games. Both patterns had been shown used for ames in Egyptian tomb murals, and some Egyptian paintings showed the two games being played side by side.

Spring Moon' in China In Beijing, the American director Alan Pakula announced plans to make a movie based on the best-selling novel "Spring Moon" to be filmed on location with an all-Chinese cast. Pakula, who directed "Sophie's Choice," "All the President's Men" and "Klote," said he will begin filming in 1985 and release the movie the following year.

"Spring Moon" was on the New York Times best-sellers list for 31

weeks in 1981 and has been published in 15 countries. The novel, written by Shanghai-born Bette

Bao Lord, focuses on a Chinese woman and her family from the twilight years of the Qing Dynasty beginning in 1892 and through the wars and revolutions of 20th century China to 1972. Pakula said he is Quote -- Whoever voted for Senator Howard Baker as best dressed politician, it wasn't his tailor. The Tailors Council of America this week announced its 10 bestdressed list noting that in the political arens President Ronald Reagan edged out Baker and for-mer Vice President Walter Mondale. Baker, the Senate Republican leader, stood before the Senate Wednesday in a shapeless brown suit and said: "I want to say I have absolutely no taste in clothes. I have even known hi my lifetime tailors and haberdashers to call me on the telephone and urge that I must come and choose a suit or they would send me one. During the Watergate hearings, I was flooded with gifts of clothing because people were ashamed to see me representing the forces of light and reason in my chosen attire. I am a slob.
